

Legal Disclaimer

The information on this website and attached or linked pages is provided as general reference and a public service. The reader is advised to check for changes to current law and to consult with a qualified attorney on any legal issue. The use of this material does not create an attorney-client relationship with David G. Wood or York Howell, LLC, or any of its attorneys (collectively "the firm"). When transmitting information over this website or via email, you understand and agree that the firm will have no duty to keep confidential the information.

Because the information posted on this website and provided in the accompanying videos, reports, and newsletters is prepared for a general audience, without investigation into the facts of each particular case, it is not legal advice: neither the firm or any of its attorneys has an attorney-client relationship with you. The thoughts and commentary about the law contained on this site is provided as a service to the community, and does not constitute solicitation or provision of legal advice.

While we seek to provide accurate information at this website and in the videos, reports, and newsletters, we cannot guarantee that the information provided here (or linked to from this site) is accurate, complete, or adequate. We provide this general legal information on an 'as-is' basis. We make no warranties and disclaim liability for damages resulting from its use. Legal advice must be tailored to the specific circumstances of each case, and laws are constantly changing, so nothing provided at this site or in the accompanying videos, reports, and newsletters should be used as a substitute for the advice of qualified attorney.

Finally, using this website or sending email to the host does not create an attorney-client relationship. The material in this website may be considered advertising under applicable rules.